People have been looking the sources of Laško from time immemorial. The refreshing, healing and soothing thermal water, which relaxes, heals and calms wounds, was already known to the ancient Romans. In the Middle Ages, the sources were visited by missionaries, and in 1854 here was the first thermal bath (Tüffer), which bore the name of the Hungarian-Austrian Emperor Franz Joseph I. The historical circumstances were soon more for the thermal bath, soon less conducive, and glittering and glamorous times were followed by times of crisis of decline and stagnation. The second half of the last century is characterized by constant growth, expansion, professional upswing and adaptation to the development of medicine and the modern demands for a holistic satisfaction of life needs and desires. Today Thermana is a modern center of health tourism with numerous programs and programs Spa benefits for health and well-being.
